Surge of concern from neighbours whose homes, schools and roads are close to waste plant site

By Lucy Purdy

RESIDENTS behind a swelling campaign to oppose a huge new rubbish processing plant on the border of Haringey, Enfield and Barnet have described the consultation so far as a "masterclass in how to alienate a community".

They want decision-makers at the North London Waste Authority to halt the planning process and return to the drawing board to hold a "proper, open debate".

The authority, which deals with rubbish from 1.7million people in seven boroughs, wants to create a Mechanical Biological Treatment plant on the site of the former Friern Barnet sewage treatment works in Pinkham Way. It is thought to be the biggest of its kind in Europe and would be capable of processing 300,000 tons of waste a year, also housing a refuse vehicle depot for Barnet Council.

The size of two football pitches, the plant could Sydney Road who helped form the Pinkham Way be up to 23m high, lie just 250 metres from people's homes and within half a mile of more than 2,000 children sitting at their school desks. The plant could be up and running as early as 2016.

Though planners argue the "EcoPark" is vital to meet stringent new EU targets on recycling, protesters are aghast that it is being considered near one of the most congested parts of the North Circular and have bitterly questioned whether planners simply "stuck a pin in a map".

The plant could attract as many as 560 new vehicle movements every day – roughly equivalent to two miles of vehicles both in and out of the junction – which residents warn could "bring north London to a standstill" disrupting lives and businesses in nearby Muswell Hill, Friern Barnet and further afield.

They argue that similar plants in Europe are built much further away from towns and cities.

"Nobody we have spoken to is in favour of this," explained Colin Parish, a journalist from Sydney Road who helped form the Pinkham Way.

Alliance against the proposals. "Local people are very angry and worried. There are more than 20 schools within one mile and the young and old are going to be worst affected. The nearest dwellings to the site are council flats so those in social housing will also suffer.

"The whole process up until now feels likea botch-job. There is supposed to have been a consultation process and apparently they posted out 10,000 letters to local homes, but no one seems to have received one. Of course there is a danger we are seen as just a bunch of Nimbys and we agree that London needs something, but this is just a madcap scheme."

Mr Parish argued that what NLWA refer to in its planning documents as a "former industrial site" has actually lain untouched since the 1960s and has become a refuge for bats and rare plants. In 1988, Barnet and Haringey councils designated it as public open space and even turned some of it over to nature conservation.

Alienated community unite to fight against disputed 'EcoPark'

Campaigners have scoffed at the proposed plant being called EcoPark, suggesting this is merely PR branding.

And residents are also deeply concerned about the scheme's health implications.

Mark Petticrew, a professor of public health, who also lives in Sydney Road, warned that noises and smells coming from the plant could be just the start.

"Gasses such as nitrous oxide, carbon dioxide and methane have the potential to have health impacts, particularly on children, the elderly and people with existing respiratory illnesses," he explained.

"Noise is another issue because the process uses mechanical drums running 24 hours a day. We know noise has an impact on sleep and, through that, mental health.

"But aside from all this is the basic issue of social justice and people's right to be consulted – and this process so far has been a masterclass in how to alienate a commu-nity. This is going to loom over people's houses – it's inevitable people will be outraged, particularly if they feel they haven't had their opportunity to comment

The plans have already been given the nod by council chiefs in Barnet and will go before Haringey Council in May.

An NLWA spokeswoman said: "We understand residents' concerns about the proposed development. We have been working hard to raise awareness of our plans with local residents so they are aware of them before we submit the outline planning application in late May.

"We have carried out a traffic assessment. This shows that the additional vehicle movements will only add a very small percentage to the number already using the road network in the area.

"The waste facilities will all be enclosed, with no sorting, recycling or treatment in the open air. This will help reduce noise and odour. The buildings will be fitted with odour control measures and the site will comply with all required environmental standards. In line with the Mayor of Lon-don's draft policy, household waste created in north London needs to be managed in north London. We've looked for a north London site that is available, of the right size and accessible by road.

"The Pinkham Way site meets these requirements. It is also a former sewage treatment works, designated for local employment and is well located to support our other facilities at Edmonton and transfer sites in Islington and Hendon.'

North Mid's maternity ward plan is put on hold

PLANNING permission to build a new maternity ward at the North Middlesex University Hospital has been put on hold until consultation into the future of Chase Farm is complete.

The new six-storey unit for women and children was to include 18 new delivery suites, two obstetrics theatres and three 30-bed wards, which is expected to cost £34m – although the funding has not yet been secured.

Planning chiefs at Enfield Council were set to decide whether construction of the building could go ahead at a meeting last week however NHS chiefs have decided to wait until after April 19 – when Andrew Lansley has asked for new ideas for Chase Farm to be submitted - before lodging the planning application.

North Mid medical director Stanley

Okolo warned this week that the delay could have a serious impact on his hospital. He said: "There is the possibility the viability of this hospital will be threatened in terms of facilities we have and cannot use, which have running costs because this is capacity we have already built in.

Last year the hospital, in Sterling Way, Edmonton, opened a series of new wards, including an A&E and out-patients' wing, under a £123million Private Finance Initiative.

However, a patient representative said pulling patients away from North Mid and delaying the decision over Chase Farm could have dire financial consequences for the hospital, which is required to repay money from the PFI agreement for some years.

Joyce Aslan, the chairwoman of the North Mid patient representative forum, has written to councillors and MPs saying she believes the two hospitals could be combined under one trust and Chase Farm should sever its ties with Barnet Hospital. She said: "Both hospitals are heading for oblivion if something is not done. "The North Mid would not be able to meet its financial obligations if reconfiguration doesn't take place. There is a sort of conflict between the two of them and it is better to have them both under one management – there can be more flexibility in decision-making and they can share some back-office staff.'

David Winskill, a Liberal Democrat councillor at Haringey Council who sits on the Central London Sector Joint Health Overview and Scrutiny Committee, emphasised that timing was of the essence. He said: "We are conscious of the serious financial implications for North Middlesex and hope that the situation is resolved as quickly as possible.

Showdown for borough's art centres as they watch curtain fall on grants

Arts Council gives decision on two hubs

By Jonathan Lovett

BOOS and cheers greeted news of the Arts Council's funding decisions for the borough last week.

Bernie Grant Arts Centre in: Tottenham will not receive a penny of National Portfolio Funding from 2012 to 2015 while Jacksons Lane in Highgate receives nearly its entire grant averaging £132,000 per year.

"This is incredibly disappointing news," said Tottenham MP David Lammy. "The Arts Council and the government have completely underestimated the importance of the arts in inner city communities.

"You only have to take a cursory glance at popular culture in the last half century to see that it is people from places like Tottenham who lead the trends in the arts world.'

Bernie Grant has been receiving £100,000 per year from the Arts Council since it opened in 2007 but a spokesman for the council said: "The Bernie Grant Centre was assessed as not having sufficient potential to contribute to our goals and priorities which are based around getting more people participating in and seeing great art.'

However, the centre is supported by Haringey Council where bosses just announced they are renewing their grant of £216,000, while they are hopeful of receiving Arts Council project funding in the future.

of relief as it was commended by the arts body in a statement: "The organisation has become a leading venue in the development of circus and physical theatre. The standard of work presented is consistently high and the venue attracts good audiences.'

In a joint statement artistic director Adrian Berry and chief executive James Tilston welcomed the decision. "Being included in the portfolio is not only an endorse-Across the borough, meanwhile, Jacksons Lane breathed a big sigh ment of Jacksons Lane but also an

130 jobs 'lost' as rail depot hits buffers

By Lucy Purdy

A UNION leader has claimed that scaled-backed plans to build a new depot on disused railway sidings in Hornsey have "lost" the borough 130 jobs.

Network Rail decided to slash the size of the proposed depot off Hampden Road, opting to place the larger depot – carrying with it 250 jobs – in Croydon and build a significantly smaller depot creating just 120 jobs in Haringey.

The larger proposal had attracted controversy, with local residents saying it would ruin the look of the area and damage wildlife.

But John Stanford, secretary of the Hornsey branch of the RMT union, warned that a vital employment opportunity had been lost now Network Rail has pulled the brakes on the bigger scheme.

He told the Advertiser: "We are quite concerned some of the messages aren't getting over. No one seems to have taken into consideration the number of jobs Haringey is going to lose if this shed is not built.

"Haringey has lost 130 jobs before they have even started. We're talking here about jobs stretching right across the board: cleaners, apprentices, clerical roles – no one has taken this into consideration."

The revised plan, which is expected to be lodged with Haringey Council soon, is 45 per cent smaller and six feet lower than the previous proposal. It will now be big enough to accommodate just three trains instead of six. The depot, which is needed to house new, longer trains for the upgraded Thameslink route through London, would be built on "operational" railway land at Coronation Sidings, north of the existing depot.

Jim Crawford, Network Rail major programme director for Thameslink, said: "The benefits of the Thameslink upgrade will be felt across London and the south east, with significant opportunities improvements to services on the line through Hornsey."

Councillor suspended over Ally Pally lease misconduct

By Lucy Purdy

FORMER council leader Charles Adje has been suspended after being found guilty of misconduct over the bungled attempted lease of Alexandra Palace.

A five-member panel decided he had brought Haringey Council into disrepute and suspended him for four months following a twoday standards hearing at Wood Green Civic Centre.

Councillor Adje failed to inform other trustees of the palace about a crucial briefing note which advised against the licence for the palace being given to property developer Firoka.

Firoka wanted to build a hotel and casino at the historic venue as well as a restaurant, banqueting suite and business facilities. An agreement which gave Firoka permission to run the palace on a 125-year lease was quashed by the High Court in 2007. An independent report found that an estimated £1.5million had been lost as a result of the botched deal.

Councillor Adje has also been suspended from the Haringey Labour Group.

Labour leader Claire Kober said: "Charles Adje can no longer participate in our decision-making or policy development, nor will he be eligible to attend any Haringey Labour Group meetings. I'm disappointed by Charles and his actions. His conduct fell well below the standards expected of any councillor but he has particularly failed to meet the high expectations the Labour party places on its members who hold elected office."

Opposition Liberal Democrats have called for Councillor Adje to resign. Lib Dem leader Robert Gorrie said: "The shocking outcome of this inquiry adds another chapter in the sorry tale of Labour's bungled custody of Alexandra Palace. Charles Adje's personal judgment is in tatters—we should not have a councillor serving if such serious questions about his conduct have been raised and proven.

"It also shows that there is something seriously rotten right at the heart of the local Labour party. Arrogant after 40 years in office, they have grossly insulted local residents in continuing to back Councillor Adie since 2007.

back Councillor Adje since 2007. "Personally I firmly believe that Alexandra Palace needs independence from the dead-weight of Labour control so the palace can finally move on."

DIG deep to uncover this horrible beauty. Chances are you won't find this no-budget Irish chiller at your multiplexes dominated by the obvious - it's probably already on DVD - but it's worth seeking out for a masterclass in good, old-fashioned Hammer horror.

An unnerving opening sequence shows exactly why Patrick and Louise have settled in the small village of Wake Wood. Happier times celebrating the birthday of their young daughter, Alice, bleed into Alice's trip to a vet's where she is savaged to death by a dog. Struggling to cope with the loss, the grieving parents move to the idyllic hamlet, eventually chancing upon Wake Wood's dark secret: resurrection.

Through a repulsive ritual involving a fresh cadaver, severed spinal chords and bloody rebirth, mourners are united with a loved one for a maximum of three days, strictly told to follow the instructions: the corpse must be less than 12 months old and, once reborn, must not venture beyond the village boundaries.

With elements of horror classics such as The Wicker Man and The Monkey's Paw - and even a smidgen of horror spoof Hot Fuzz the plot it most consciously resembles is the great British film, Don't Birthistle do an equally impressive

Detectives from the Homicide And Serious Crime Command are investigating, under Detective Chief Inspector Charles King, who released a picture of Mr Easton in a bid to encourage witnesses to come forward.

DCI King said: "We urge anyone with any information about the murder of Kelvin Easton, or any witnesses to the incident in the Boheme nightclub, to come forward."

Tributes have been left since his death on social networking websites including an online memorial on Gone
Too Soon. Carmel Oliver said:
"We still can't believe the happened and that you're never coming back. You are loved so much by so many people, Kel, who'll never forget you, never let their memories of you fade and always have room in their hearts for you."
Tina Olayinka wrote: "I'm never going to forget you and all the times that you made me laugh. I pray that you rest in peace. You will always be Anyone with information should call the incident room on 020 8345 4142.

Three men and a 17-year old have been arrested in connection with the inquiry. All have been released on bail without charge.

HUTTON ADDS TO INJURY WORKES

By Dominique Stafford

TOTTENHAM HOTSPUR have been hit by another defensive injury setback after it was revealed that Alan Hutton is likely to miss the rest of the season.

The Scottish international right-back underwent surgery on a knee injury this week, to join central defenders William Gallas, Younes Kaboul, Ledley King and Jonathan Woodgate on the sidelines.

An official statement from the club said: "Alan is to undergo knee surgery after scans confirmed the defender had torn his lateral meniscus.

"The Scotland international injured his knee in training on Thursday and the operation is likely to rule him out for the rest of the season."

Manager Harry Redknapp was optimistic that Gallas would overcome his knee problem in time to feature in last night's Champions League clash against Real Madrid, but Kaboul remains troubled by a thigh strain while injury-ravaged duo King (groin) and Woodgate (calf) are both likely to miss the remainder of this campaign.

"It's an absolute nightmare," Redknapp said. "We are down to two fit centrehalves and we think Ledley might have to have another operation."

Although their injury concerns are mainly centred around the defence, it is at the other end of the pitch that Tottenham are struggling to make an impact at the moment.

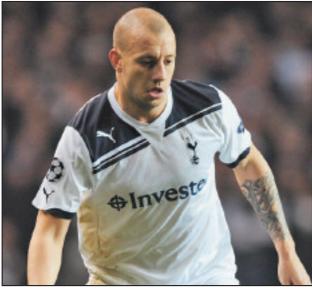

Saturday saw Spurs fail to score for the third successive match in all competitions as they were held to a 0-0 draw at Premier League basement side Wigan Athletic to lose ground in the race for Champions League qualification.

It was the hosts who enjoyed the better of the few clear-cut chances that were created at the DW Stadium, with Spurs keeper Heurelho Gomes having to make good saves to thwart Tom Cleverley and Conor Sammon.

"We didn't play well," Redknapp admitted. "We normally pass the ball a lot better than that and move it quicker.

"It was an attacking team, but we didn't get hold of the ball and we weren't clever enough in the final third to create many chances."

Beaten Skolars fail to build on their good start

THE London Skolars once again failed to build on a promising start as they crashed to a 48-16 defeat at home to Whitehaven in rugby league's Co-Operative Championship One on Sunday.

The Skolars were very much in contention for a first league win of the season after an opening half which ended with them just four points adrift, but they fell away badly in the second period to slump to yet another heavy loss.

another heavy loss.

Whitehaven began the campaign on minus nine points after going into administration, but wins in their opening three league matches had seen them already wipe out that deficit prior to Sunday's match.

A positive start for the Skolars saw

A positive start for the Skolars saw Jy-Mel Coleman and Ade Adebisi both cross the line during an evenly contest first half, with Neil Thorman adding a goal to leave them trailing 14-10 at the interval.

But the second half was a different story as a solitary Austen Aggrey try, converted by Thorman, was all they had to show their efforts as the visitors ran riot.

Carl Sice, Lee Doran, Craig Calvert, Scott McAvoy (two), Craig Benson, Lewis Palfrey, Luke Isakka and Mal Wiper all scored tries for Whitehaven, with Palfrey adding six goals.

The London Skolars face a daunting task on Saturday when they make the trip to unbeaten league leaders Swinton Lions (5pm).
